Soliton IT is pleased to announce the company has deployed systems in over 80 hospitals and clinics in the UK and Australia.

Announcing this achievement, director Bob Watson said:

"In 2004 we set out to become a leading supplier to the NHS of cost-saving speech processing solutions. I am delighted to announce that, with over eighty hospitals and clinics using Soliton, including thirteen NHS Trusts in London and a number of sites in Australia we have achieved our goal.... I believe there are a number of reasons for our success:

First and foremost is the dedication, experience and technical skills of our development and support teams who have built robust and reliable products with close to 100% uptime....

.....our products are developed and supported in house by experienced people who know and understand not just the technology, but also the healthcare business.....and we have the experience and knowledge to closely integrate our products with most clinical systems....

..... and most important, we understand that it is not just the Hospitals that benefits from using Soliton, but also the patients and their GPs, who ultimately receive a faster and more efficient service..."

"In 2011 and beyond there will be even more need for the NHS to improve efficiency by driving down costs and increasing productivity. I therefore believe the demand for robust and efficient fully integrated speech processing solutions such as ours will continue to increase. With exciting product developments in the pipeline, we look forward to satisfying this demand, providing even better solutions in the years ahead."
